About the Workshop

The 2 Day Online FDP on Integrating Indian Knowledge Systems into Teaching and Research is an initiative to familiarize educators, scholars, and researchers with the wealth of indigenous knowledge that India has nurtured over millennia. Rooted in the National Education Policy (NEP) 2020, this FDP aims to bridge the gap between modern education systems and the profound traditional wisdom systems of India by exploring their relevance, pedagogy, and interdisciplinary potential.

Over two days, this workshop will offer insightful sessions led by eminent scholars, practitioners, and educationists who will unpack themes ranging from ancient sciences, philosophy, arts, linguistics, and ecology to their integration into curricula and research methodologies. This initiative encourages academic introspection, contextual learning, and inclusive knowledge dissemination.

Objectives

- To create awareness about the significance and scope of Indian Knowledge Systems (IKS) in contemporary education and research landscapes.
- To explore interdisciplinary approaches that connect traditional Indian wisdom with modern academic disciplines.
- To equip faculty members with the tools and resources needed to integrate IKS meaningfully into their teaching pedagogies and research frameworks.
- To enhance understanding of ancient Indian contributions in areas such as mathematics, medicine, architecture, ethics, language, aesthetics, and environmental sustainability.
- To support NEP 2020 guidelines on incorporating Indian epistemologies into higher education.
- To foster reflective and inclusive teaching practices that value local knowledge traditions alongside global perspectives.
