Sensor inside a football? FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022 to introduce new technology

Details about the new technology in FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022. The new system will have 12 cameras within the stadium which will track the movement and position of both the ball and players. The ball is with a motion sensor inside which will provide the information on the player's position at the time when the ball is kicked. As per ESPN, the old VAR system used to 70 second to make an official offside decision. But now, the decision will be made in only 25 seconds. The FIFA World Cup 2022 in Qatar will have another interesting and new feature within it's official match ball 'Al Rihla'. The feature will be an updated VAR (Video Assistant Referee) system which is called semi-automated offside technology. The new technology will replace the VAR system which was introduced in the 2018 FIFA World Cup in Russia. "VAR has already had a very positive impact on football and we can see that the number of major mistakes has already been dramatically reduced. We expect that semi-automated offside technology can take us a step further," said FIFA Referees Committee Chairman Pierluigi Collina in a statement.
